The meeting of the Women's Literary Society, of Arlington, last Tuesday afternoon in the auditorium of the Arlington Club was one of the most interest-ing, as well as unique, gatherings the society has held since its organization. Mrs. Eugenia H. Siebers, president of the society, introduced Mrs. Santa Claus in the person of Mrs. Ford Suderly, who read an address in rhyme written by Mrs. Siebers, in which the reader was referred to as the real "new woman." The gifts on the exchange table were distributed by Mrs. Santa Claus, who collected 10 cents from each member, the society thus clearing $6 above the expense of the entertainment. After Christmas papers were read, the society resolved itself into a decorating committee and hung garlands of evergreen about the auditorium. Later in the day Miss Margaret Day gave a finely interpreted plana solo, and A. Cromble sang two tenor songs, both performers being enthusiastically applauded. Mrs. Siebers, the president, was presented with a handsome etching by the club just before the meeting adjourned for luncheon.

during the coming year. To-morrow evening the Ladles' Guild of St. Barnabas's Hospital will give a play in the Essex Lyceum for the benefit of the hospital fund, in which eighty young people will take part. It is entitled "The Comedy of Toys." The story opens in the workroom of a toy shop. The toyman retires leaving Katy, his daughter, to close the shop. Katy has a queer customer in an old woman, who leaves has a queer customer in an old woman, who leaves her smelling salts on the table, after having shown her that they are quite reviving and will make even a doil sneeze. Katy experiments with the salts on the soldler doil, who instantly comes to life, smatches them from her and proceeds to awaken the other toys in the shop, until all are endowed with life and motion. Katy is a prisoner, and is restrained from cailing her father. The Man in the Moon arrives and invites them to visit Mother Goose. The dance of the paper doilies, the pantomime of the jumping jacks and the drill of the letter blocks, three entirely original features, tend to make the closing of this act a scene of great animation and intense interest. The final chorus and ensemble movements, as the doils start for the land of Mother Goose, will produce a brilliant picture. In the next act Katy meets Mother Goose and all her delightful family. The toys get into all sorts of difficulties, and begin to wish they were back in the toy shop. A good fairy comes to Katy's assistance, cais the Sandman, who sprinkles sand in the eyes of the dolls, causing a magic sleep. The scene closes with the dolls back in the toy shop, greatly to the relief and delight of Katy. Among the special features of this act is an eccentric burlesque and dance of the owl, pussy cat, frog and piggywigs. The play is under the direction of Livingston Russell, special scenery has been painted, the costuming will be elaborate, and the whole promises to be a most charming holiday entertainment. The patronesses are Mrs. Thomas A. Starkey, Mrs. John A. Gifford, Mrs. William A. Ripley, Mrs. Nelson Wright, Mrs. Paul Botticher, Miss Grace Truesdell, Mrs. Archibald Mercer, Mrs. Edward H. Congressman James F. Stewart, during a flying visit home for Christmas, found time to tell a good story of his initiation into the ways of Washington. "The Star," of that city, printed an article about which he was referred to as an enthusiastic admirewoman who had been haunting the capital seeking permission to adopt a little Indian boy off a reservation read the article about Mr. Stewart, and began to chase him. Finally she caught him, and said good man who takes such an interest in the Indians, and I am sure you can do something to help me and I am sure you can do something to help get my dear boy back again." Mystification a explanations followed, and the woman with a for a little Indian departed wiser and sadder, hing learned that the "Indians" so dear to heart of Judge Stewart are merely his fellow-me bers of the Passaic County Republican Ind League, and that the Washington paper's allus to him as the friend of Poor Lo was nothing me than a complicated attempt at a joke, supposed be understood by his political friends at home.

The Orange Riding and Driving Club is getting ready for an enlargement of its facilities, so as to give a horse show early in the spring or summer with even greater success than that which attended the one given a few weeks ago. It is contemplated to enlarge the ring to nearly double its present size, by adding a lot on the west of the clubhouse running through to Prospect Place. This will give a ring 82x290 in size, making one of the largest in the country. Along the southern side of the ring it is proposed to have a row of boxes on the ground floor, and a large gailery on the second floor. There is also a pian on foot to extend the present clubhouse out to the Halsted-st, front, on the lines originally planned. having a café, billiard-room and a first-class restaurant, and so combining the advantages of a riding and driving club with those of a purely social club.
